BRUSSELS — Spain and Portugal turned in the worst performances of any major European economy in a new survey by the OECD. Spain is No. 2 on a list of the “best and worst” performers in the scores of 11 economic indicators published on Tuesday in a survey by the Paris-based Organization for Economic Cooperation and Development. The report is based on 2012 data. Portugal, which joined the European Union along with Spain in the 2001 accession Treaty, also entered the bottom rank — with the lowest score on the list of 10 advanced economies. The country has endured economic turbulence for the last decade with a recession beginning in 2008 and a full-blown crisis in 2014. Norway, where the government passed into power on Tuesday after a week of political stalemate, was ranked as the most competitive economy in the world. The latest industrial production data presented a stronger-than-expected performance in the country, indicating that it has been gradually coming out of recession. The statistics will provide a boost to the reputation of Prime Minister Erna Solberg, who became the first woman elected leader of a member of the 27-nation European Union after a run-off victory over a far-right rival. “Given the challenges it has faced, Norway is paying a high price for its successful response,” the OECD said.

Monday, May 29, 2008 Allison was so great this morning. Even though my main focus is Monday Daydreams, I have a different blog to blog about. Allison's Monday Diary was the perfect inspiration for this post. I came up with an idea for this and this is what I came up with. It's a nice change from my normal posts. Here is her idea for this post: Bobby's Mom It's Monday and I'm driving home from work. Driving home is never a smooth commute, but today I have a special reason to dread it. Today I am going to pick up Bobby at home. I have been given the task of being his mom for the summer. I am nervous and a little stressed about it. I don't think he knows this yet. He hasn't come to me asking “Mom, am I going to be your son for the summer?”, but that is probably the next thing he'll do. I'll be the one to Current concepts in the management of perioperative infection in pediatric heart surgery. Infectious complications are a significant cause of morbidity and mortality in pediatric cardiac surgery. This article will review current concepts on perioperative infections in pediatric heart surgery. The definitions and epidemiology of this problem are discussed. In addition, the pathophysiology and anatomy of the neonatal heart are discussed. Finally, the commonly used prophylactic and therapeutic measures and their results are reviewed. The prevention of surgical site infection is based on meticulous asepsis, early recognition of infection, and rapid initiation of appropriate therapy. The role of prophylactic antibiotics in prevention of cardiac and sternotomy wound infection is discussed and explained as well. There is a paucity of evidence to support the use of antibiotic administration in cardiopulmonary bypass in prevention of sternotomy infection. Prophylactic chest tubes are no longer recommended for simple neonatal thoracotomy after a systematic review. Antibiotics are not recommended in the immediate postoperative period after cardiac operations. A single dose of a second-generation cephalosporin may be adequate as a single-dose antibiotic prophylaxis for patients undergoing aortic and/or mitral valve replacement.
